The U.S. military says a little more than half of the prisoners at Guantanamo Bay are on hunger strike.

Army Lt. Col. Samuel House says 16 of the 84 prisoners are being force-fed, and five have been hospitalized. He says none of the hospitalized men have life-threatening conditions. Prisoners have been on a hunger strike since early February to protest conditions and their indefinite confinement. (AP)

Flood Fears Far From Over

Rivers crest across the Midwest, but more rain is in the forecast

Clarksville, Mo.

Those fighting floods in several communities along the Mississippi River were mostly successful Sunday despite the onslaught of water, but an ominous forecast and the growing accumulation of snow in the upper Midwest tempered any feelings of victory.

The surging Mississippi was at or near crest at several places from the Quad Cities south to near St. Louis — some reaching 10-12 feet above flood stage. Problems were plentiful: Hundreds of thousands of acres of swamped farmland as planting season approaches; three people dead; roads and bridges closed, including sections of such major highways as U.S. 61 in Iowa and Missouri and crossings at Quincy, Ill., and Louisiana, Mo.

The U.S. Coast Guard said 114 barges broke loose near St. Louis on Saturday night, and four hit the Jefferson Barracks Bridge in St. Louis County. Most of the runaway barges were corralled, but at least 10 sank and two others were unaccounted for, Coast Guard Lt. Colin Fogarty said.

Two of the confirmed flood-related deaths occurred near the same spot in Indiana; another was in Missouri. In all three cases, vehicles were swept off the road in flash floods. High water could be responsible for two more, both in Illinois, where a decomposed body was found Thursday in an Oak Brook creek and a body was found Saturday in the Mississippi River at Cora. Investigations continue.

And the danger is far from over, as spots south of St. Louis aren't expected to crest until late this week. Significant flooding is possible in such places as Ste. Genevieve, Mo.; Cape Girardeau, Mo.; and Cairo, Ill.

Adding to concern is a forecast that calls for heavy rain tonight and Tuesday throughout much of the Midwest. National Weather Service meteorologist Julie Phillipson said an inch of rain is likely in many places, even more in others. Rain is projected from Wisconsin through Missouri.

"That's not what we want to see when we have this kind of flooding, that's for sure," Phillipson said.

Tax-Free Online Shopping Could End Soon

Washington

The days of tax-free online shopping could finally be numbered.

The Senate is planning to vote as soon as today on the Marketplace Fairness Act, which would give states the authority to collect sales taxes on all Internet purchases, handing local governments as much as $11 billion per year in added revenue that they are legally owed — but that hasn't been paid to them for years.

Since before the dawn of Internet shopping, the basic rule was that as long as a retailer didn't have a physical presence in the state where the consumer was shopping, the company wouldn't have to collect a sales tax. Technically, shoppers are supposed to track these purchases and then pay the taxes owed in their annual tax filings.

The result: Online retailers have been able to undercut the prices of their non-Internet competitors for years. Shoppers learned they could

The Amazon Factor

In 2008, New York passed an "Amazon tax" that forced the giant online retailer to collect sales taxes from shoppers who live in the state, even though Amazon didn't have a brick-and-mortar presence there. Others followed suit. Currently nine states require Amazon to collect sales tax, including California, Pennsylvania and Texas. (AP) browse products in the aisles of a Best Buy, only to click "purchase" on their smartphones for a tax-free deal from an Internet retailer.

The bill introduced by Sen. Mike Enzi, R-Wyo., would grant all states the power to collect taxes from out-of-state vendors selling goods to their residents. The measure appears likely to win a filibuster-proof majority in the Senate since members approved the idea in March in a 75-24 symbolic vote.

Last week's explosion at a fertilizer plant in West, Texas, killed at least 14 people, injured 200 and destroyed many buildings, including this apartment complex.

Still No Answers After Texas Blast

Experts work to find out why plant exploded, killing 14

West, Texas

On the first Sunday after a fertilizer plant explosion leveled part of a tiny Texas town, pastor John Crowder stood atop a long flatbed overlooking a hayfield and spoke to his congregation.

Crowder's First Baptist Church in West remains blocked off as investigators work on the scene of Wednesday's blast that killed at least 14 people and injured 200.

"We have lost our friends and neighbors," Crowder told about 100 people sitting in the audience. "But ... we don't have to be afraid."

The explosion reportedly killed 10 first responders, many of them volunteer firefighters who came after initial reports of a fire at the plant. A memorial service for first responders is set for Thursday.

Authorities have not yet identified what caused the blast, which was so powerful it registered as a small earthquake. Assistant state fire marshal Kelly Kistner said the blast left "a large crater."

The explosion destroyed about 50 homes and severely damaged a nursing home and other buildings nearby. More than 60 people are working in the blast zone for the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives and the state fire marshal's office.

Kistner said officials have found the center of the explosion, "which is important, because as we conduct our investigation, we'll be working from an outer perimeter inward. ... So knowing the seat of that explosion is important."

Robert Champion, the special agent in charge for ATF's Dallas office, said experts plan to get into the crater in the next couple of days "to see what transpired to cause this devastation," Champion said. "It's a slow process, but we're getting there." PAUL J. WEBER AND CHRISTOPHER SHERMAN (AP)

The condition of a 5-year-old girl who was allegedly kidnapped, raped and tortured by a man and then left alone in a locked room in India's capital for two days has improved, a doctor said Sunday, as protests continued over the authorities' handling of the case.

D.K. Sharma, medical superintendent of the state-run hospital in New Delhi where the girl was being treated, said Sunday that she was responding well to treatment.

Police say the girl went missing April 15 and was found two days later by neighbors who heard her crying in a locked room in the same New Delhi building where she lives with her family. The girl was alone, having been left for dead after the brutal attack, police say.

A 24-year-old man was arrested Saturday in the state of Bihar in connection with the incident. He was being questioned Sunday.

The incident comes four months after the fatal gang rape of a woman on a New Delhi bus sparked outrage across India about the treatment of women in the country.

For the second consecutive day, hundreds of people protested Sunday outside police headquarters in the capital, angry over allegations that police had ignored complaints by the girl's parents that she was missing.

Somalis Increasingly Embrace Elopement

Secret weddings are back after strict Islamic rule fades

Walaweyn, Somalia

Abdi Ali says goodbye to his veiled girlfriend, Anisa, and they take separate streets. Soon they're on a minibus leaving Mogadishu, pretending they don't know each other.

More than two hours later, they arrive at a shanty in Walaweyn. A man and woman walk out; they have just been married. Ali, 25, and his girlfriend, 23, will be next.

Since the Islamic extremists of al-Shabab have been pushed out of most of Somalia's cities and towns, life has begun to return to normal. Al-Shabab had declared eloping illegal, even punishable by death. The harsh rule has been replaced by a more tolerant form of Islam, and elopement once again is popular.

"Already this year we married hundreds of people, unlike last year when you could barely receive 10 or fewer a month," said Sheikh Mohamed Salad, who marries eloping couples in Walaweyn.

Backstory

Reasons young Somalis elope vary. It is favored by poor young men who cannot afford the hefty dowries given to brides' families. Others are rebelling against an arranged marriage so love can prevail. Elopement is generally frowned upon in the Wahabi school of Islam that is growing in influence. But Sufism, which many moderate Somalis follow, allows for elopement. (AP)

In the case of Ali and Anisa, Anisa said they decided to elope after her parents refused her request to marry Ali, intending her to marry a cousin in America.

The no-frills ceremony is a far cry from a traditional Somali wedding. But the smiles of Ali and Anisa show their delight.

"Our dream has just come true. We are finally married now," declared Ali, though they will keep their relationship secret for now.

Then the newlyweds board a minivan back to Mogadishu, sitting apart, as if they don't know each other. (AP)

Busing the Suburbs

Population increases create wider use of county bus systems

Washington

With the Washington region's population boom, more people have had to figure out how to commute in an area where the roads are famously congested and the Metro-rail system has a limited reach.

For an increasing number of commuters, the answer has been the buses crisscrossing the region's suburbs, where city- and county-run bus systems have seen a steady rise in ridership in recent years.

But relying on buses means depending on lines that in some cases have to traverse big areas and are at the mercy of the region's traffic.

"The morning seems really reliable, which makes sense for a bus system," said Meaghan O'Malley, 33, of Fairfax, who started taking the Fairfax Connector last year. "They start out great, but things slow down throughout the day with breakdowns and traffic."

Even as ridership has risen, road capacity hasn't. But with buses seen as a way to reduce congestion by taking drivers off the road, some jurisdictions are constructing or considering new lanes meant to enhance bus service.

A 5-mile stretch of bus-only lanes in Arlington County and Alexandria is scheduled to open next year. In Montgomery County, a task force has recommended a 160-mile system of express bus lanes, though a recent study said this plan is not practical.

The bus lines operated by each of the region's suburban jurisdictions are often overshadowed by Metro's vast system of rail and bus lines, but they are workhorses and a vital link for many commuters.

The lines in Montgomery, Prince George's, Fairfax, Arlington, Prince William and Loudoun counties and the city of Alexandria logged more than 52 million trips last year, up from more than 49 million in 2010.

Only Montgomery County's Ride On service, the suburban system with the highest ridership, logged fewer passengers in 2012 than in 2010. Meanwhile, Metrorail's ridership dropped to 212.1 million from 217.3 million during the same period.

Traveling by bus is often cheaper than traveling by train or car, and that is often the appeal for many commuters. But for all the value in commuting, riders from across the region say that outside of the weekday rush-hour windows, lags in service can be a problem.

Zahra Javaheri, who takes a Ride On bus a few days a week, said she has waited for 45 minutes for a bus before giving up.

"They are not on time," Javaheri said. "But the buses are convenient."

Putting 'Special' Into Elections

Yes, it's April, and, yes, there have been nine major elections in D.C. in the past decade. Voter fatigue is understandable. But don't overlook Tuesday's D.C. Council at-large special election or let the lack of high-profile candidates deter you.

The unusual nature of special elections tends to help draw a wider variety of contenders. They bring out "wildcards and a lot of people that wouldn't come out in your regular primaries," says Doug Sloan, a political consultant.

Many candidates think they are likelier to succeed because it's a shorter election cycle. And without primaries, traditionally long-shot candidates typically stand a better chance at winning a seat. "Independents and Republicans are able to come in and not have to face a lone Democrat in a general election," Sloan adds.

The unusual nature of special elections tends to help draw a wider variety of contenders.

Name recognition also plays less of a role than it used to. Today, "social media helps the candidates who aren't well-known become well-known," said Marie Dressel, the longtime D.C. political activist who ran for council chairman in the 1993 special election. Of the seven candidates on the ballot, five are running for major public office for the first time.

But remember, six current council members at some point won a seat via special election. Don't let your introduction to your next council representative happen after you had a chance to do something about it.

Last-Ditch Effort in Council Race

Crowded field leads Silverman to try for a back-door deal

Washington

D.C. Council candidate Elissa Silverman tried to broker a deal to get Matthew Frumin to drop out of Tuesday's election for an at-large seat, a last-ditch effort to reduce the number of Democratic candidates counting on support from the city's majority-white neighborhoods.

A representative of Silverman's campaign met with Frumin earlier this month and urged him to quit the race, both candidates confirmed over the weekend. If he obliged, Silverman pledged she would help Frumin, a Ward 3 Advisory Neighborhood Commissioner, unseat council member Mary Cheh next year, according to sources familiar with the discussion.

Frumin confirmed that account Sunday, but he said he would have preferred that it not have been made public. "I am not trying to end with a story like this," he said.

Silverman, a former reporter on leave from the Fiscal Policy Institute, denied that she tried to link Frumin's candidacy this year to Cheh's political future. She said she was merely trying to coalesce "reform and progressive" Democrats behind her candidacy to keep incumbent Anita Bonds or Republican Patrick Mara from winning.

Mara, making his third council bid in five years, is banking on a strong turnout from Republicans. Bonds, the only African-American Democrat in the race, is expected to do well in neighborhoods in the eastern part of the city.

Frumin, Silverman and Democratic candidate Paul Zukerberg are hoping for strong support from Democrats on Capitol Hill and in the western part of the city. Perry Redd, a member of the Statehood Green Party, is also running.

Zukerberg said Saturday that he also has been approached about dropping out of the race but declined to specify who asked him.

The dust-up comes on the final weekend of the campaign, as all six candidates raced across the city looking for support while finalizing get-out-the-vote strategies. With turnout expected to be low, candidates say it might take as few as 15,000 votes to win.

Future Uncertain for D.C. Budget Autonomy

Washington

On Tuesday, voters in the nation's capital are all but certain to approve a charter amendment that would grant the city more control over its municipal budget.

In theory, the amendment would take effect unless Congress passes a disapproval resolution and President Barack Obama signs it, which is unlikely given the enthusiastic support from Obama and Senate Democrats for greater independence for the district.

But it's not clear what will happen if the referendum passes.

"I can definitively answer: Nobody knows," said Delegate Eleanor Holmes Norton, a Democrat who represents the district in Congress.

Some city leaders fear the amendment will backfire, or at the very least, it won't get the district any closer to its long-stated goal of spending local tax dollars without congressional approval. It could also be challenged in court, or opponents in Congress could try to defeat it.

The uncertainty shows that even after nearly 40 years of home rule, the path to greater freedom for the city to manage its affairs is not easy.

District leaders point to the city's longstanding fiscal health in arguing that the local government shouldn't have to wait for the OK from Congress to spend money. The District has had more than 15 consecutive years of balanced budgets and ended the past fiscal year with a $417 million surplus, most of which went to its rainy-day fund.

In this climate, the Democratic mayor has been able to beat the drum for budget autonomy.

After the election, Norton said her mission will be to protect the referendum from interference by Congress.

"There are a number of ways people who oppose the District's right to spend its own money could attack a referendum," Norton said. "But I have no idea who ... would be inclined to. ... This is a Congress that can't be predicted from one day to the next." BEN NUCKOLS (AP)

Knocking Down Grandma's Door

Demand for land leads many brokers to elderly residents

Arlington

In Arlington, Bethesda and other hot real-estate markets, a new wave of tear-downs is underway, and some of the ripest properties for demolition are owned by elderly, longtime residents.

Builders say the age of a homeowner is irrelevant. The only numbers that matter begin with dollar signs: Is the cost of the property low enough to replace it with a bigger, more expensive house? But in the costly, densely populated suburbs, the economic realities often lead them to grandma's house.

"Land is so scarce in North Arlington, builders are out there in droves looking for decent-sized lots."

— KRISTIN KELLY, REAL-ESTATE AGENT

In sought-after neighborhoods, vacant land is almost nonexistent. The next-best thing is an older house on a lot large enough to accommodate a 5,000- or 6,000-square-foot mini-manse — especially a house that hasn't been repaired or renovated for years and won't cost that much to buy.

In the tear-down market, decades of deferred maintenance, dated kitchens and ancient bath-

Trading Up

When Marjorie Lynette Binford died in August at age 81, her relatives quickly sold her North Arlington 1950s Colonial and half-acre lot for $1 million to Suburban Builders. Last month, Binford's neighbors learned that Suburban was planning to build three two-story houses on the lot. Dividing the property into three will give each of the new houses lots larger than those of many of their established neighbors, builder John Karanik said. It will also allow him to recoup his costs. Once the new homes are finished, they will likely sell for about $1.5 million each. Neighbor Dana Koch said she hopes the result "doesn't look like ... a Harris Teeter look-a-like." (TWP)

rooms are the new "must haves."

Pocketbook considerations persuade many aging homeowners and their relatives to sell to builders. It can be a relief for elderly homeowners living on fixed incomes who may not have the money to get a house market-ready.

But the intensity of the interest in their properties can be off-putting to some seniors.

Alisa Soderquist, 67, received a hand-addressed letter from a real-estate agent offering to introduce her to his clients, a family desperate to live in North Arlington. Soderquist, who has no desire to leave her home of more than 20 years, said she considered the note overly aggressive and "a bit insulting" and immediately tossed it in the trash. # Search for Schools Chief Could Prove Difficult

Upper Marlboro, Md.

As he begins the search for a new schools superintendent, Prince George's County Executive Rushern L. Baker III said he would consider candidates from outside education to lead the struggling $1.7 billion system.

In an interview, Rushern said he was interested in school leaders from across the country who have experienced some of the challenges facing Prince George's, but that he has also studied the nontraditional choices by mayors such as New York's Michael Bloomberg, who tapped lawyer Joel Klein to serve as schools chancellor in 2002.

Baker was granted the authority to appoint a new schools chief by the Maryland General Assembly earlier this month. While state lawmakers did not give Baker much of what he had initially proposed — a full takeover of the school system, including control of the budget and superintendent — the ability to hire the schools chief is a responsibility that no other county executive in Maryland has.

But he will have to navigate several obstacles that could make his task more difficult, including the unusual arrangement he has been handed: Although he'll hire the superintendent, that person will report to the school board, not him. Furthermore, the takeover bid has inflamed tensions between the county executive and the school board. Then there is the question of whether all the recent turmoil will turn off potential candidates.

Since launching his takeover bid, Baker has been accused of usurping the school board's authority in a surprise power grab. But he has said that nothing short of drastic change could help the school system, which has remained stuck near the bottom in student achievement in the region, with only modest gains in recent years. # An Agonizing Wait

Injured suspect is unable to talk as officials search for answers in Boston

Washington

The surviving suspect in the Boston Marathon bombing remained in serious condition Sunday and unable to talk to authorities as federal prosecutors prepared to bring charges against him.

"We don't know if we'll ever be able to question the individual," Boston Mayor Tom Menino said.

Boston's police commissioner said that federal prosecutors were still reviewing information about possible charges against Dzhokhar Tsarnaev, 19, known to friends as "Jahar."

Tsarnaev, who has a breathing tube in his throat, is at Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center, the same hospital where his older brother, Tamerlan, 26, was pronounced dead Friday after a shootout with police in the Boston suburb of Watertown.

Tsarnaev was discovered by a Watertown resident in his backyard boat just minutes after police announced the lifting of the lockdown Friday.

The brothers also are believed by authorities to be behind the shooting death of a Massachusetts Institute of Technology police officer, 26-year-old Sean Collier, late Thursday night.

There are still many questions regarding the brothers' possible links to international extremist groups and plans to launch other attacks in the wake of last week's marathon bombing, but the image that is emerging in interviews with those who knew the brothers is that Tamerlan had become radicalized and troubled in recent years.

Boston Police Commissioner Ed Davis said that the brothers' large arsenal of weapons and unexploded bombs suggested that they were intent on launching other attacks in the area. "I personally believe they were," Davis said on CBS' "Face the Nation."

Davis said the stockpile was "as Police conduct an intense manhunt Friday in Boston and its suburb of Watertown, looking for Dzhokhar Tsarnaev.

Infrared imaging shows Dzhokhar Tsarnaev hiding in a boat in Watertown, Mass., where he was taken into custody.

The Case Ahead

Massachusetts Gov. Deval Patrick said Sunday on NBC's "Meet the Press" that officials have video that shows Dzhokhar Tsarnaev, 19, left, leaving his backpack shortly before it exploded at the Boston Marathon. His brother, Tamerlan, 26, right, the other suspect in the attacks, was pronounced dead Friday after a shootout with police.

Four leading Republicans demanded Saturday that Tsarnaev be treated as an "enemy combatant," which would allow him to be charged under the laws of war in a military commission or held indefinitely without charge. But prominent Democrats, including Sen. Dianne Feinstein of California, disagreed Sunday. It is unclear what charges prosecutors would file against Tsarnaev, but the most serious charge available would be the use of a weapon of mass destruction to kill people, which carries a possible death sentence. Massachusetts does not have the death penalty. (TWP/AP) dangerous as it gets in urban policing."

But Menino discounted that possibility in an interview on ABC's "This Week," saying, "I'm not convinced that they were planning more attacks."

If and when he recovers, Tsarnaev is expected to be questioned by interrogators from the CIA, FBI and the military. The marathon bombing, which killed three people and wounded more than 170 last Monday, so far has not been linked to any larger terrorist cell.

Authorities have not read the surviving Tsarnaev brother his Miranda rights, which include the right to remain silent and the right to an attorney. Federal law enforcement officials said they plan to use a public safety exception.

A delay in Miranda warnings is justified when suspected terrorists are captured in the U.S., according to a 2010 Justice Department memo. The Miranda warning would come into play only if prosecutors were to use any incriminating statements Tsarnaev might make against him. (THE WASHINGTON POST/AP)

Churches Fill as Boston Reflects, Remembers

Across the rattled city of Boston, many churches opened their doors Sunday to remember the dead and ease the grief of the living. But Boston's historic Trinity Episcopal Church could not host services, as it is located within the bombing crime scene. The congregation was invited by Temple Israel to worship at its synagogue instead. The FBI allowed church officials to enter the darkened church Saturday to gather the priests' robes and the wine and bread. (AP)

IN RUSSIA

Militant Groups Deny Involvement in Attacks

On Sunday, Islamist separatist groups in the Russian province of Dagestan, where Tamerlan Tsarnaev had visited, denied any connection to the attack, saying that their enemy was Russia and not the U.S. "We are at war with Russia," said a statement posted for the Mujahideen of the Caucasus Emirate Province of Dagestan. (TWP)

RESPONSE

Parents of Suspect Say Trip Wasn't an Influence

The parents of Boston suspect Tamerlan Tsarnaev insisted Sunday that he came to Dagestan and Chechnya last year to visit relatives and had nothing to do with the militants operating in the volatile part of Russia. His father said Tsarnaev slept a lot of the time. Still, attacks ravaged the region during his six-month stay. (AP)

Think Inside the Box for Samples

Paying a subscription to receive mystery treats catches on fast

Smart Spending

Once, businesses would hand out free samples in malls or throw them in with other purchases. Now, several businesses will send out a box of mystery samples to customers once a month — for a fee.

You can get boxes full of every product you can imagine, including healthy snacks, dog treats and kids' toys. But are these boxes really worth the money? Here are some things to consider if you're deciding to get yourself one of these monthly subscription boxes.

First of all, be skeptical, says Sheryl Garrett, founder of the Garrett Planning Network of financial planners. "From a marketer's standpoint, it's a great way for them to separate us from our money," she said. "While we think it's a treat."

While it may be a good way to explore products you may not have heard of before, she said, you're probably going to spend more than you would have otherwise.

"If you pay $20 to get five snacks in a box," she said, "they may be tasty and edible, but would you have gone to a specialty food shop and bought these four or five bags? Probably not."

I Want to Try ...

A sampling of the categories of subscription sample boxes:

- Beauty: Birchbox.com offers beauty products and perfume samples starting at $10 a month. Glossybox.com sends higher-end samples and starts at $21 a month.
- Food: Naturebox.com offers five snack-size "healthy" snacks for $19.95 a month. For $7 a month, Walmart's Goodies.co sends five sample snacks.
- Kids: Babbabox.com offers activities for kids ages 3 to 6 for $29.99 a month. Citruslane.com offers products for newborns to 3-year-olds, starting at $21 a month.
- Pets: Barkbox.com offers sample goodies for dog owners for $19 a month. Buggysbox.com, a similar dog-themed box, is $17 a month. (AP)

Still, if you want to try a sample service, one way to get more bang for your buck is to find services that are well-reviewed and closely match your tastes.

Gautam Gupta, CEO of Naturebox.com, said to take advantage of a company's presence on Facebook or Pinterest to evaluate the company.

"One of the things that give you a great sense of whether customers like the product or not is what they're saying," he said.

Nationals

John Buck hit his seventh home run of the season, Dillon Gee earned his first win and the New York Mets beat the Washington Nationals 2-0 on Sunday to take two of three games from the NL East champions.

Coming off a pair of poor starts, Gee (1-3) pitched three-hit ball for 5⅓ innings and New York finally got a strong effort from its struggling bullpen, which entered with the highest ERA in the majors at

The Mets, 4-14 against the Nationals last year, have won their first three series at home for the first time since 2006.

Slick defensive plays by Buck behind the plate and Ruben Tejada at shortstop gave the Mets a boost. Meanwhile, Washington committed three errors — though none proved costly.

The Nationals tried to rally in the eighth when pinch-hitter Steve Lombardozzi led off with a single and Denard Span walked against 31-year-old rookie Scott Rice. With the meat of the order coming up, Jayson Werth grounded into a dou-

Zimmermann (3-1) threw 96 pitches in five innings. He allowed two hits and three walks.

Anthony Rendon went hitless for Washington and committed an error in his major league debut.

Before the game, Rendon said his parents tried to fly in from Houston for his debut, but airline difficulties left them without seats even though they thought they had booked their reservation. He said his parents plan to be in Washington to see him play when the Nationals return home Monday to face St. Louis.

Buck launched a drive to left-center leading off the second, giving him 22 RBIs in the first three weeks. MIKE FITZPATRICK (AP)

Duncan, Ginobili and Parker tally 53 points in a Game 1 victory

NBA Playoffs

Manu Ginobili and Tony Parker scored 18 points each as the San Antonio Spurs led from early in the first quarter and beat the Los Angeles Lakers, 91-79, on Sunday in Game 1 of their Western Conference first-round series.

Tim Duncan added 17 points and 10 rebounds, Matt Bonner had 10 points and Kawhi Leonard had eight points and 11 rebounds for San Antonio.

Dwight Howard had 20 points and 15 rebounds, Steve Nash scored 16 points and Pau Gasol added 16 points and 16 rebounds for Los Angeles.

Despite the double-doubles from Howard and Gasol, the Lakers failed to take full advantage of their inside presence, much to the consternation of the injured Kobe Bryant, who was watching the national broadcast.

Bryant is out for the remainder of the season with a torn Achilles.

Pacers 107, Hawks 90

Paul George scored 23 points and recorded his first playoff triple double, leading Indiana past Atlanta 107-90 for a 1-0 lead in the Eastern Conference series.

George made just three of 13 shots but was 17 of 18 from the free-throw line, had 11 rebounds and 12 assists. George Hill added 18 points despite playing with a left groin injury. It's the first time since 2006 that the Pacers have opened a playoff series with a win.

On Sunday, the Pacers played more like the team that was contending for the No. 2 seed rather than the one stumbling to five losses in its previous seven games. (AP)

United Loses 4th-Straight Game

D.C. United

Jack McInerney scored two goals before halftime to lead the Philadelphia Union to a 3-2 victory over D.C. United on Sunday.

Conor Casey also scored early for the Union (3-2-2), who led 3-1 at halftime. It was Philadelphia's first victory in four matches. Lionel Pajoy scored early in the second half to help United (1-5-1) back into the game.

Perry Kitchen also scored to help United score multiple goals for the first time this season, even though it lost its fourth straight.

United entered the game with just two goals in its first six matches and was held scoreless in its previous two.

United has now lost three straight at RFK after having a 17-match home unbeaten run snapped in a 2-1 defeat against Columbus on March 23. (AP)

New York Jets cornerback Darrelle Revis played in just two games last year after suffering a torn knee ligament.

Revis Traded to the Bucs

Jets get Tampa Bay's first-round pick for the star cornerback

NFL

The New York Jets have traded star cornerback Darrelle Revis to the Tampa Bay Buccaneers for this year's No. 13 overall draft pick and another selection next year.

The Buccaneers announced the deal on the team's Twitter page Sunday, saying Revis agreed to a new six-year deal. The Jets will also receive a conditional draft pick, either a third- or fourth-rounder next year.

Revis arrived in Tampa on Sunday to take a physical with the Buccanears, who wanted to check out his surgically repaired left knee before agreeing to the deal with the Jets.

Trade rumors have been swirling for months involving Revis, with the Buccaneers thought all along to be the most serious suitor.

Coach Rex Ryan's Jets also have the ninth overall pick in the draft that starts Thursday.

The trade leaves Antonio Cromartie as the team's top cornerback, a role he flourished in last season in Revis' place, with 2010 first-rounder Kyle Wilson stepping in as the other starter.

The Jets could also target a cornerback — perhaps Alabama's Dee Milliner or Florida State's Xavier Rhodes — in the first round.

For the Bucs, adding Revis improves a secondary that already includes cornerback Eric Wright and safeties Mark Barron and recently signed Dashon Goldson but finished last in pass defense last season.

Revis, 27, tore the anterior cruciate ligament in his left knee last September against Miami, and underwent surgery the next month. He has been rehabbing since, and has indicated in interviews that he fully expects to be ready for the start of the regular season.

Revis was New York's first-round pick in 2007 after then-GM Mike Tannenbaum traded up to No. 14 to draft the former University of Pittsburgh star. DENNIS WASZAK JR. (AP)

Ethiopian Wins London Marathon Amid Tight Security

London Marathon

Tsegaye Kebede of Ethiopia claimed a second London Marathon title Sunday, cheered through the streets by thousands of spectators reassured by enhanced security at the first major race since the twin bombings at last week's Boston event.

A race that started with a moment of silence to the Boston victims ended with a thrilling conclusion under clear blue skies.

his chest, Kebede chased down Emmanuel Mutai in the closing stages and overtook the tiring Kenyan to cross the line first.

Kebede clocked 2 hours, 6 minutes and 4 seconds to emulate his 2010 triumph in London, while compatriot Ayele Abshero was third. Mutai, who was 29 seconds behind Kebede, blamed hip and thigh problems for conceding the lead.

Olympic silver medalist Priscah Jeptoo of Kenya won the women's race in 2:20:15. ROB HARRIS (AP)

Lily Tomlin narrates HBO's "An Apology to Elephants," which shows how humans mistreat the world's biggest land animal.

LISA JEFFRIES/COURTESY OF HBO

Maternal Instincts

Lily Tomlin shares her passion for elephants — and playing moms

Q&A

HBO 7:00 Lily Tomlin is an elephant lover and that's the truth. Five years ago, she began "advocating" for the pachyderms, with the goal of moving elephants from confinement at zoos and circuses to the PAWS (Performing Animal Welfare Society) Elephant Sanctuary in California. Now she's narrating the new HBO documentary "An Apology to Elephants" (airing tonight), which shows how humans have cruelly treated the world's largest land animal. We spoke to Tomlin about her passion for elephants — and for comedy.

What's your impression of elephants?
They're just so impressive in their size and majesty. And when you see footage of them grieving over their dead, they're so aware and sensitive. What an elephant endures living in captivity became a symbol to me of all the suffering we perpetrate.

The documentary criticizes some zoos but praises others.
I have feelings that elephants shouldn't be in zoos. Probably no animals should, but least of all the big ones, and the elephant is the biggest.

If I can change topics — a generation ago, were women reluctant to be funny?

I was working at a cabaret review in 1965 or so, and one of the girls in the show — the ingenue — was so boring onstage. But in the dressing room, this girl was so funny I'd double over laughing. I'd say, "You have got to do that on stage." And she would say, "I wouldn't want anyone to think I was unattractive." And that's how it was.

"What an elephant endures living in captivity became a symbol to me of all the suffering we perpetrate."

You weren't afraid to make yourself unattractive — like when you played Ernestine the telephone operator.

[Speaking in Ernestine's voice] You know what, let me tell you something. I'm very attractive. I don't have a couch in the lady's room for nothing. [As Lily Tomlin]: Ernestine thinks she's fabulous-looking, she's arrogant, full of herself. She was a not terribly attractive female by conventional standards. But she's so confident in herself, that's all that matters.

Nowadays you're everybody's mom: Tina Fey's in the movie "Admission," Reba McEntire's on "Malibu Country."

They let me name the mother on "Malibu Country" Lillie Mae, which was my mother's name. She was very lighthearted, enjoyed life, was fun. A little of that comes into play. And on "Eastbound & Down," I played Kenny's [Danny McBride's] mother, Tammy.

Ah, Kenny, your "famous baseball player son." I read that HBO has ordered another cycle of the show.

I'm praying they put Tammy on for an episode. Just because she's fun to play. She misbehaves. She and her son exchange drugs and trade pills. She's audacious like Kenny, almost like he learned it from her. And she's a champion bowler, so he got his athletic abilities from her. And Kenny is such a scoundrel you can't help but love him.

NBC Pulls 'Hannibal' Episode

Television

NBC has pulled an episode of its serial-killer drama "Hannibal" out of sensitivity to recent violence.

The episode, which was to air this week, features a character who brainwashes children to kill other children, NBC said.

The show's producer, Bryan Fuller, asked NBC to pull the episode, citing the Newtown, Conn., school shooting in December and last week's Boston Marathon attack, NBC said. The episode, the series' fourth, will be replaced by another "Hannibal" hour.

A "clip package" with scenes from the unaired episode will be available online this week, with commentary by Fuller, NBC said. Scenes involving the children won't be included. (AP)

Dance-Floor Diversity

Super-producer Diplo makes sure his group, Major Lazer, is always several steps ahead

Music

Major Lazer is a work in progress.

Diplo's part-time project, which released the album "Free the Universe" last week, is ever-evolving as the producer and his cohorts tinker with a sound they think could be the future of electronic dance music.

"Everything's changing now. EDM's shifting," Diplo says. "The house music thing exploded two years ago and now people are looking for something different. ... What we do as Major Lazer, we just incorporate everything. We're just DJs at heart, and selectors. We love all kinds of music."

That's reflected in the Caribbean-flavored "Free the Universe" with its reggae and dancehall influences. But the group — which also includes Chris Leacock, the producer known as Jillionaire, and Walshy Fire

Diplo (aka Wes Pentz) rose to fame as M.I.A.'s main collaborator.

(Leighton Walsh) — pushes the envelope much further on the record.

Bruno Mars, Tyga and Mystic guest on the hip-hop-influenced "Bubble Butt." At the other end of the spectrum is the mellow and melancholy "Get Free," featuring Amber Coffman of The Dirty Projectors.

"What we do as Major Lazer, we just incorporate everything. We're just DJs at heart and selectors."

Diplo, whose real name is Wes Pentz, has created some of the most memorable moments in the movement and pop music in general (see: M.I.A.'s "Paper Planes"), but he's keenly aware of the tradewinds that can carry you away from the hot molten core of EDM.

Thus, at live shows, the group blends influences — such as soca pop from Trinidad and Tobago and dancehall from Jamaica — with hip-hop dynamics and a DJ's light show.

"There's so much saturation right now in the market," Leacock says. "So you have to put a package out there that makes them say, 'Oh, [expletive], that really blew my mind.'" CHRIS TALBOTT (AP)

Life After Death Row

An unjustly jailed man struggles to re-enter society on 'Rectify'

Miniseries Premiere

SUND 9:00 Sundance Channel's engrossing "Rectify" picks up on the drama of stories about the wrongfully incarcerated.

The six-episode miniseries is compelling and ambitious.

Created and written by actor Ray McKinnon, "Rectify" turns that hoariest of crime-drama devices — the small-town murder — inside out.

After 19 years on death row for the rape and murder of his high school girlfriend, Daniel Holden (Aden Young) is freed when newly examined DNA evidence creates reasonable doubt.

A thoughtful, odd man made odder by years of isolation, Daniel returns to his Georgia hometown, baffling even supporters with his airy, Zen-like demeanor.

Within his family, reactions vary. Daniel's emotionally broken mother (J. Smith-Cameron) frets. A loutish stepbrother (Clayne Crawford) is suspicious, and a sweet-natured, born-again sister-in-law (an outstanding Adelaide Clemens) sees something almost holy in Daniel's blank-faced depths.

The most captivating is headstrong Amantha (Abigail Spencer), the loyal sister who's sacrificed everything to Daniel's cause.

The pilot episode's lightest moments show Daniel trying to navigate a DVD player and catch up on films from the past 20 years, starting with "Dazed and Confused," a title that best sums up his mental and spiritual state.

“Digital pioneer Jaron Lanier was once a true believer. As the father of virtual reality and a driving force behind the collaborative ethos of Internet 2.0, he was convinced that information should be free and crowdsourcing was the way to wisdom. He has changed his mind.”

— SMITHSONIANASSOCIATES.ORG comments on Lanier, who, in his new book “Who Owns the Future?” “argues that free information is wrecking our economy and a digital crowd can too easily turn into a lynch mob,” according to the site. The computer scientist will be speaking at the Navy Memorial in May.

“#guys #u #dont #have #to #hashtag #every #word #aah #its #so #annoying”

— @KASHANALI_I remarks on the fact that the actual word “hashtag” was trending on Twitter, as a hashtag, Sunday.

“If nothing else, ‘Oblivion’ will go down in film history as the movie where Tom Cruise pilots a white, sperm-shaped craft into a giant space uterus. The scene is more interesting to describe than it is to watch.”

— IGNATIY VISHNEVETSKY AT ROGEREBERT.COM/REVIEWS gives a quick synopsis of the sci-fi film, which opened Friday.

“Two antennae fall in love and get married. The wedding was okay but the reception was incredible.”

— @TOMMIECOLLINS offers up a joke for wedding season.

“One of the great joys (or at least essential requirements) of the boozy one-night-stand is the ability to throw on whatever clothes of yours [are] found strewn across an alien bedroom, and saunter out the door on your own volition. Without it, you face the very real and comically awkward situation of hanging around.”

— DAN MCCARTHY AT ESQUIRE.COM/BLOGS/CULTURE tries to explain the awkwardness after he was stuck in an apartment during the manhunt for the Boston Marathon bomber.

HOROSCOPE

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) You won't find it easy making up your mind today, as the choices that are presented to you are all likely to prove attractive.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) The reasons you have for doing a certain thing are yours and yours alone. Don't be too quick to change your outlook when faced with hardship.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) What you are doing may seem to invite others to behave in ways that do not sit well with you, but they are acting independently.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) You know how to practice what you preach, and today is a very good day to do just that. You're expected to be in the right place at the right time.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) It's a good day to treat another with the very same respect with which you wish to be treated. Fair for one is fair for all.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) A decision you only recently made may not be sitting well with you; it's not too late to change it — provided you have support.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) You must be willing to reveal everything today when the time is right — and you'll know when that time comes without a shadow of a doubt.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) You're in need of a little more security today; feeling safe, indeed, will enable you to branch out in a new, exciting way.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Mind your manners today! How you behave is likely to prove even more important than what you say, what you accomplish or where you go.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Someone is claiming to know more about you than is even possible. There is something going on that requires some close scrutiny.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) You may not be working as efficiently as possible, but most everything you do is likely to attract the right kind of attention.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Someone may be claiming to know that which you, in fact, know beyond a shadow of a doubt. It may be time to speak up.

Nearly 50,000 New Followers and Not One Comment on Her Weight? Suspicious Indeed.

LeAnn Rimes drew Internet ire last week when her Twitter following increased by nearly 50,000 in 48 hours, Radaronline.com reported. Critics suggested that Rimes bought bot followers, which is consistent with most of the new followers' avatars: the generic Twitter egg. (EXPRESS)

REUNITED

'Gosh, Justin's So Sexy When He's a Pitiful Wreck'

Selena Gomez and Justin Bieber were seen holding hands, snuggling and kissing in Oslo, Norway, late last week, People.com reported. "They looked really in love," said an unnamed witness. Bieber has had a rough time in Europe, what with sickness, fighting, controversial comments about Anne Frank, and a confiscated monkey. (EXPRESS)

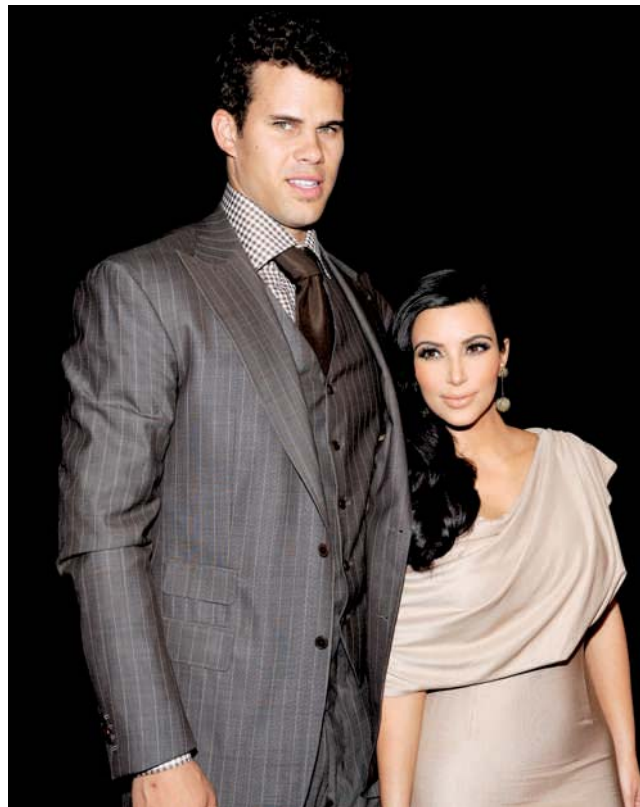

Justin has gone from dreamboat to self-parody, and Selena loves a project.

Victims

Only Creepier if It Were Soundproof

Radaronline.com alleges that Nadya "Octomom" Suleman locked her children in a room with a Plexiglas window (at her former home in La Habra, Calif.) so she could observe them without interacting with them. "It's really sad, like she had them locked in her own makeshift prison cell or something!" said an unnamed source. (EXPRESS)

This is officially the last time we have to run a photo of these two together!

KIM'S PARADE OF HUSBANDS

Kanye, You're Up

The marriage of Kim Kardashian and Kris Humphries ended Friday in a grim courtroom with a judge approving a divorce settlement after a protracted legal battle between the former couple. Humphries sought an annulment, claiming their marriage in an elaborate wedding ceremony was a fraud staged for "Keeping Up With the Kardashians." Humphries did not attend the brief hearing. His lawyer, Benjamin Johnson, said he agreed to the settlement. This was Kardashian's second marriage. (AP)
